LaShawn: The Final Chapter

In 1989, the American Civil Liberties Union (later Children's Rights, Inc.) filed the LaShawn A. v. Barry lawsuit over the quality of services the District of Columbia was providing to abused and neglected children in its care. Today, the District is working to meet all requirements of an Implementation and Exit Plan (IEP) negotiated in December 2010, so that Federal Court will return control of local child welfare to the city.

What's required?

The IEP contains 92 performance standards (see back) related to . .

9 key aspects of child welfare practice and administration (below)

Why does it matter?

Investigations

Speedy first response protects children from abuse/neglect and prompt services help troubled families. Families stay together whenever possible.

Services

Sufficient array of effective resources helps children and families overcome crises, change circumstances that place children at risk, and heal.

Visits

Placement

Monitor safety, support child and family progress in healing, maintain family connections, and support foster parents

Less trauma of removal for children placed in safe, stable, quality settings for the shortest possible time

Health Permanence Promote children's overall healthy growth and development while identifying and taking care of any special needs

Training

Expedite adoption for children who can't return to their birth families Social workers, supervisors, managers, and foster parents build and maintain the skills and knowledge

License, manage, and maintain an array of placement options that meet the needs of children and youth who can't be safe at home

Business/Finance

Placement Support

Operate strong quality assurance, information technology, and other administrative functions and maintain adequate staff and funding to meet demand for services and to continue reforms

What's the status?

Baseline: December 2010 (based on 92 standards in Implementation and Exit Plan)

for optimum performance

One Year Later: December 2011

44 achieved (48%)

37 to be achieved (40%)
